

NYCPM

NEW YORK COLLEGE OF PODIATRIC MEDICINE

Nicole is a rising third-year podiatric medical student at New York College of Podiatric Medicine who is dedicated to exploring more about the fundamental interplay between medical pathologies and their impact on foot health.

As a current student researcher on campus and part of a Harvard research team, she enjoys delving deeper into pathophysiology to influence therapeutic approaches to care. Being well introduced to the field of podiatry as a prior patient, she is eager to share her infectious love of podiatric medicine and empower patients to take charge of their medical care.

She has an impressive portfolio of research and clinical experience, in addition to her commitment to service to others as a representative on the NYCPM Education Committee, an academic peer mentor, teaching assistant and tutor, and as the President/Founder of the NYCPM Student Chapter of the American College of Podiatric Medicine.