

Griffin Isaac Van

My name is Griffin Van, and I am originally from Philadelphia; however, I was raised in Jacksonville, Florida. For my undergraduate education, I attended Tulane University, where I received a Bachelor of Science degree in Public Health. For my medical training, I have attended Temple University School of Podiatric Medicine. Upon graduation, I will be completing my residency at MedStar Washington Hospital Center, a Level I trauma center located in Washington D.C.

In my spare time, I love to play guitar and travel. Up until the pandemic began, I had left the country every year since I started my undergraduate education. My most recent trip was with my dad and grandfather to Normandy. In terms of my professional pursuits, I hope to become involved in residency training and remain involved with academia upon graduation from residency.
